The lack of diversity is due to sexist “old boys’ club” practices at the Trump White House. Jessica Schulberg reported for the Christian Science Monitor on how women would have to leave their jobs to enter the administration because of sexism. “As you move up, there are steps you have to do — it is a very gendered system at the upper echelons,” Ms. Schulberg said. “If you are a woman, you need to be a wife and mother first and foremost. I think that senior women will leave government service.” So far, seven men have been confirmed by the Senate for top Cabinet positions in Trump’s administration. The only woman confirmed for a key role, for Commerce Secretary, is Penny Pritzker. She is the second woman nominated to the Commerce position. But that nomination was controversial due to the connection of her company, the Carlyle Group, with former Trump campaign manager, Paul Manafort. There are still two more nominations pending for Commerce Secretary. The Senate is expected to vote on one of those appointments Monday, and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell has said that all of his party’s nominees will be confirmed. Nevertheless, the decision to not confirm Pritzker was a major setback for women in the Trump Administration. Since Trump’s election, President Trump has talked a lot about how he is going to get more women into higher levels of business. “I think I’ll do that,” President Trump said. “I’ll add some great women to our cabinet.” He failed to live up to that promise. “They’re giving tremendous support, but they’re not from our side,” he said. Haley brings gender diversity to the Trump Cabinet. This is the first time in recent history that Trump has nominated a f678ea9f9e
